CRITERIA LIST

We will assess a nominee's excellence in one or more of the following areas:

1. Influencing Others

Successful diversity and inclusion efforts have champions who create opportunities to engage with others to discuss and consider the importance of diversity. Champions of diversity and inclusion can exert influence, not necessarily because of their titles, but by making a persuasive connection between organizational performance and progress on diversity and inclusion. Speaking engagements, both internally and externally, can be one mechanism for making the case for diversity and inclusion.

2. Being a Role Model

Champions “talk the talk and walk the walk.” It is not just what champions say, it is how they act that signals whether diversity and inclusion is truly important to the organization. For example, champions can demonstrate that mentoring is valued by personally mentoring someone from a different background. In addition, it is a powerful communication tool when champions discuss openly and honestly how they manage their professional and personal lives.

3. Continually Learning

To be an effective champion, it is important to understand the challenges faced by different groups in the profession. These challenges and the barriers they can present often unintentionally go unnoticed by members of a majority group who have never experienced being an outsider in their profession. A champion of diversity and inclusion regularly reaches out to a diverse array of attorneys to understand first-hand the experiences of someone from a different background.

4. Cultivating Diverse Teams

Whether staffing teams internally or externally, diversity champions seek out diverse talent in its many forms. Champions of diversity and inclusion place a premium on good management, both for themselves and others. They strive to develop and retain their diverse team members, by mentoring, coaching, and providing constructive feedback.

5. Innovating and Taking Risks

In order to make diversity a reality, creative and practical solutions must be identified and implemented. Champions of diversity believe change is possible and see opportunities where others see obstacles. For example, a champion could spearhead the creation of an affinity group or a pilot flexible work program in one department in order to assess effectiveness and build the case for broader implementation.

6. Holding Oneself and Others Accountable for Diversity

Accountability is an evolutionary process beginning with systematically making the case that diversity and inclusion is beneficial to the organization's and individual's bottom-line. When individuals are not participating, diversity and inclusion champions use their personal influence to encourage others to take action. As clients, champions can identify ways to meaningfully foster diversity in their outside counsel.

7. External Leadership Involvement

On its own or in conjunction with internal activities, diversity champions can take an active role in fostering diversity and inclusion in the profession. Champions may take an active role in minority bar associations or in diversity committees in local or national bars. Champions of diversity and inclusion can also forge connections with law schools, colleges, high schools, and other organizations in order to broaden the diversity pipeline. Pro bono activities are another important way in which nominees may have an impact on diversity within the profession and society in general.
